What did the US government do with Huawei equipment?

It restricted the use of Huawei equipment in DOD networks, prohibited federal agencies from purchasing or using Huawei equipment, prohibited the use of federal grant and loan funds for Huawei equipment, restricted exports to Huawei, and funded the replacement of Huawei equipment in U.S. networks.

Does Huawei have a trade restriction?

In 2019, the Department of Justice (DOJ) charged Huawei and its officials with financial fraud and sanctions violations. The Department of Commerce (DOC) subsequently added Huawei to the Entity List--a trade restriction list published by DOC's Bureau of Industry and Security--requiring companies to obtain a license to export goods to Huawei.

How did US export restrictions affect Huawei?

U.S. export restrictions, which effectively barred Huawei from using American technology anywhere along the chipmaking process, meant the Chinese company could no longer source its chips from TSMC.

Why did China buy more Huawei devices?

Source: Huawei via WSJ China's government directed state agencies to buy more of Huawei's software, chips and mobile devices, a policy that boosted Huawei while reducing China's reliance on American companies, including Apple, whose iPhones are no longer allowed in the workplace for many government employees.
